IT'S GREAT TO BE FIT

By Spencer D. West

It's usually the first step every new or returning runner makes when they decide to start running: buy a new pair of running sneakers (that, and pick out matching running clothes of course). This is not a decision that should be taken lightly. The wrong choice in footwear can lead to painful miles on the road and also injuries that can sideline any runner (from novice to elite). Besides injuries that can be caused from running in the wrong running shoes, a runner's performance in training and races can also be hindered.

The good news is that finding the right footwear is as easy as visiting your local running specialty store (avoid the big box stores at all costs). There you can be fitted properly for the perfect shoe for your size, gait, and style of running. This is done through a process called "fitting" which combines gait analysis with trained store personnel watching you walk, and if available, jog on a treadmill. Runner's Depot in Davie, for instance, has two state of the art treadmills with cameras (along with the flat screen monitors to view your stride while running), so they can properly analyze your gait and choose the correct shoe for your needs. Although not a complicated process, this analysis must be done by someone trained to know what to look for and how to use the information they gather from the analysis to put you in the best footwear for your specific goals. Just like runners don't all fit into the same mold when it comes to their running style, foot shape and size, neither do their training and racing goals. For instance, an experienced marathoner or even an ultra runner who puts enormous amounts of miles on sneakers will need a different type of shoe (more durable and able to withstand and respond to the demands of high mileage) than a runner who is focusing primarily on speed or shorter distances, who would want a lighter racing or minimalist shoe.

For most new runners, the first choice in footwear will be a very important decision, but so to will be the trial and error period as you test out different brands, and styles. Once a runner gains more experience
